Dear Parents and Carers,

National Changes to Statutory KS2 Assessment Information 2016

I am writing to inform you about the national changes to statutory assessment in 2016. Following the introduction of the new National Curriculum, the assessments are now much more rigorous and challenging than previous years. The expectation has increased.

In previous years, the children were given a level, e.g. 4A/4B, based on teacher assessment and a test level based on a SAT (Standard Attainment Test) in reading, SPaG (spelling, punctuation and grammar) and maths. The national expected standard at the end of year six was 4B.

In previous years, the children were given a best fit level for teacher assessments (reading, writing, maths and science) and the test (reading, maths and SPaG). In teacher assessments, children did not have to match every criterion to have reached a level.

As part of the national curriculum review, levels have been abolished. From 2016, scaled scores will be used to report national curriculum test outcomes. We do know that scale 100 will always represent the 'national standard'. The scale will have a lower end point below 100 and an upper end point above 100. The government have not yet set this national scale. Therefore the raw score that children will get on a test will translate to a scaled score. Schools have no indication what this raw score will be at the moment.

The way that teacher assessments are made has also changed. We will not be assessing children against exactly the same criteria as the test; therefore the teacher assessment and the test result could differ from each other. For the teacher assessment, the children must have reached the required standard and have evidence for all the criteria on the teacher assessment statements. However in the test, they are being tested on a broader selection of end-of-key stage two requirements and pupils may respond better to some aspects than others.

This means a child needs to meet all of the criteria per subject to reach the expected standard. I have attached a link to the full assessment document for your information.

The teaching staff continue to work extremely hard to deliver a broad and balanced curriculum whilst preparing pupils for the end of year assessment. The tests will take place nationally during week commencing 9th May 2016.

If you have any questions, please ask and we will try to answer these with the information currently available to us.

Yours sincerely,

Fiona Bennett
